The Constitution and State Rights.

Some of the Radical papers have a great deal to say about the celebration, by the Democracy of Illinois, of the aniversary of the adoption of the Constitution on the 17th. They declare that Democratic devotion to the Constitution means State sovereignty, and strive to contrast

It is a great point with the Radicals to sneer at the doctrine of State rights, which they very properly term a cardinal principle of the It is a great point with the Radicals to sucer hat he doctrine of State rights, which they very properly term a cardinal principle of the Democratic party, but which they falsely allege has its origin in dislovalty and culminates in rebellion. Disloyalty, in its true sense, is rather to be found among those who are false to the precepts and principles of the Constitution than among its special friends and devoted adherents; and the party which wars upon constitutional government is surely more open to the accusation of rebellion than the party that defends it.

We are very far from defending the Democratic party against the charge of being in favor of the doctrine of State rights. That doctrine, we are free to admit, is now, and ever has been supported the following delegate were then congrained as a credential committee. First Ward-D. F. Roberts. Second Ward-D. F. When it shall be found e proper to discard the doctrine from the po-a fundamental principle of the government as at present constituted. Nothing can be more abourd than the assumption that the recogni-tion of the reserved powers of the States, and tion of the reserved powers of the States, and their sovereignty as to all such reserved powers, lead to disloyalty and rebellion. We might dwell upon the fact that the convention which nominated Seymour and Blair specifically declared that secession had been definitely and for all time settled, but it is unnecessary to do so. That was not at all needed to disprove any identity between Democratic principle and rebellion. It is enough that the dectrine of State rights, around which the Radicals would cast so much odium is, as we have said, the dectrine of the Constitution, after which the nominations of the election showed clearly that the action of the country convention had been satisfactory. Dr. & D. Standiford and J. B. Parks were then put in nomination, after which the nominations closed.

The regulation of suffrage, and all other powers not specifically delegated to the general government in the Constitution, are impuestionably reserved to the States, and in their exercise the States are sovereign and supreme.

Since, in the present contest, Radical champions throw down the glove on this question, they will not find Democrate solve to take it in. P. It is not find the property of the country. Sweeney, Eeq., for Congress.

We are also advised by a special dispatch from Henderson that a large Democratic meeting at that place yesterday passed a resolution in favor of Sweeney for Congress.

Enough counties have held meetings and instructed for Sweeney as to insure his nomination beyond the possibility of a doubt.

The convention in the Ninth District did a good work in nominating Hon. John M. Rice for Congress. It is a stering Democrat and a stering genticman, of very decided ability and great energy, and one of the most efficient stumpers in the State. He will make a faithful and reliable Representative, and one of whom his constituents and the State will have good cause to be proud. He will be elected by an immense majority.

Dr. E. D. Standiford Nominated for the Senate.

Elsewhere we publish a full report of the action of the Democratic Senatorial Convention which met at Woodland Garden yesterday, and nominated Dr. E. D. Standiford. Dr. S. has been one of the most active and energetic Democrats in the county, and no gentleman did more efficient service in the reorganization of the Democratic party in 1866 than he. He is active, intelligent, laborious and efficient, and will make a useful and valuable member of the legislature. We presume the will have no opposition. The proceedings of the convention were entirely harmonious.

Daviess County Instructs for Sweeney.

A special dispatch to the Counts if from Owensboro, yesterday, informs us that the Daviess County Democratic meeting appointed delegates to the Greenyille Convention, and instructed them to vote for Wm. N. Sweeney, Esq., for Congress.

We are also advised by a special dispatch.
